INTRODUCTION

The purpose of this document is to increase awareness and opportunities for networking among the many stakeholder groups that have an interest in sustainable development in the Grenadines Islands of both Grenada and St. Vincent and the Grenadines. Most of this document is devoted to listing the numerous small non-governmental organisations (NGOs) in the Grenadines. It is hoped that this will increase awareness among these groups of who is doing what, and will lead to greater communication among people with similar interests.

ORGANISATIONS, ASSOCIATIONS AND GROUPS

In the Grenadines there are many organisations, associations and groups that are involved in activities relating to sustainable development. They vary widely in size, focus, membership and age, but they all have in common the desire to strengthen their communities through group action.

Civil Society is the incubator of new ideas. It thrives on risk, creativity, novelty and invention, and offers the best of what it finds to the institutions of society, as a gift.

FISHING COMMUNITIES

Fishers and others engaged in the fishing industry (fisherfolk) in the Grenadines are important users of marine resources. Fishing provides livelihoods directly. Fisheries products are also an important input to local food supply and to the tourism industry. In many parts of the world fisherfolk are organised in associations or cooperatives. This provides them with a collective voice in planning and making decisions that affect them. In the Grenadines, there are numerous fishing communities, and three major fisheries complexes, however, there is only one fisher organisation, in Petite Martinique (Figure 1). The locations of fishing communities/beaches and complexes are shown here as an indication of where fisherfolk might become organised in order to become more involved in civil society activities to determine their own future and the future of the Grenadine Islands.

PRIVATE SECTOR

The many small and large businesses that operate in the Grenadines are also stakeholders in sustainable development. This document cannot provide a complete listing for these private sector organisations. However, they are already listed in several ways. The yellow pages of the phone directories in both countries is one source of information. Tourism businesses can be found in various readily available publications/websites such as:

- Ins and Outs of St. Vincent and the Grenadines, Miller Publishing Company Ltd.
- The Visitor Magazine, Grenada, Carriacou and Petite Martinique
- Escape Tourist Guide St. Vincent and The Grenadines
- www.svgtourism.com

GOVERNMENT

The governments of both countries are important stakeholders in sustainable development. Understanding government structure can be an important component of interacting with Government departments in an effective and productive way. To facilitate those interactions, this project has prepared a separate document entitled “Structure and function for government departments of Grenada and St. Vincent and the Grenadines as it relates to sustainable development in the Grenadines Islands”.

People coming together and helping each other solve problems is by no means a novelty ...What is distinctive about today is the extension of the virtues of solidarity and responsibility to the public sphere on a global scale.
